

Overview of Resident Demographic Information

Since 1989, HomeRise has used the platform of housing to help residents stabilize and access key services supporting self-sufficiency.

61%

of HomeRise residents were chronically homeless at move-in, meaning they were continually homeless for 1+ year and have a disabling condition.

98%

of HomeRise residents across the organization have retained housing since moving in with HomeRise, compared to the national PSH rate of 83%

Our residents are likely to have been chronically homeless, but the vast majority have been able to retain their HomeRise housing.

HomeRise residents are diverse and represent the highest-need groups among San Francisco's homeless and San Franciscans in general.

of our residents are seniors, compared to 14% of San Franciscans age 65+

14%

of are families, and of those, 50% are single-parent or caregiver households

60%

are persons of color, including 42% who are Black/African American versus 6% of SF

6%

of our residents are veterans, compared to 4% of San Franciscans overall

Most residents are food insecure. The Tenderloin, where most of our residences are, is a food desert: just 1% of stores sell fresh produce.

HomeRise residents have an average income of about $800 per month. The average San Francisco one-bedroom rents for over $3,300 per month.

86% are underemployed, needing opportunities to rebuild skills and confidence after being out of the job market for extended periods.

Just 21% of residents have some college or a Bachelor's degree or higher versus half of San Franciscans overall.

Though HomeRise provides and links to key services, our residents still have many areas of need that impact their self-sufficiency.
